Intermodal Connections

Shippers enjoy a choice of rail services at the Port of New York/New Jersey along with an extensive market reach covering the Eastern half of the United States, Eastern Canada and beyond. True rail-road competition in major inland markets, expanded services and better transit times are among the benefits for port customers.

The New York/New Jersey port region is served by three Class I railroads—Canadian-Pacific Railway, CSX and Norfolk Southern and offers 10 international rail terminals which handle international containers. ExpressRail, our first on-dock intermodal transfer terminal, provides daily, double-stack rail service to these markets. And there's even a barge service from the Port's Red Hook Terminal across New York harbor to connect via ExpressRail to the inland markets.

In addition to ExpressRail, the Port expanded intermodal rail capability by opening an interim rail terminal for handling international container traffic generated by the Port Newark Container Terminal. Plans are also in the works for larger, permanent intermodal facilities for both Port Newark and the Howland Hook Marine Terminal on Staten Island.

In order to help locate the right intermodal connecting service, we have provided a list of the railways serving the port along with their phone numbers and Web sites so you can contact them directly.
